

Imagine being able to ride your bike to the front of your home and park it there. Wouldn't that be cool?

The ramp is a continuity of the street and you can find typical street furnitures like trash cans, bike racks and street lamps

There is enough space here for small concerts and street musicians. The music can then be heard across the entire ramp.

Baart sells Norwegian kanelbolle in his kiosk and forms the meeting point at the foot of the ramp.

A café on the top floor forms the end of the park ring. Here you can not only drink a delicious coffee but also enjoy the view accross the river and the surrounding brygger.

Thanks to the slightly inclined ramp, all goods can be easily pushed upwards.

The ramp is like a big playground. There is enough space for all children to play.

Perhaps the Norwegian national sport will soon be able to be practised on concrete?